DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

1. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

2. Claims 1-6 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by McNeely et al. (US 4,782,391).

3. Regarding claim 1, McNeely teaches a reproduction apparatus, characterized in comprising: frequency division means for frequency-dividing a predetermined master clock (Figs. 1-2 and col. 5, line 38 – col. 6, line 24 teaches of FCS and of SCS both of which have the same period (frequency)) for outputting a first clock of a first frequency (Figs. 1-2, col. 2, lines 46-56 and col. 6, lines 24+ teaches of divide by N circuit 112), and frequency-dividing the master clock for outputting a second clock (Figs. 1-2, col. 2, lines 46-56 and col. 6, lines 24+ teaches of divide by N circuit 114) of a second frequency different from the first frequency;

first content information output means for outputting first content information to be reproduced based on the first clock (Figs. 1-2, col. 2, lines 46-56 and col. 6, lines 24+ teaches of divide by N circuit 112, for which a primary signal is set to N=1);

second content information output means for outputting second content information to be reproduced based on the second clock (Figs. 1-2, col. 2, lines 46-56 and col. 6, lines 24+ teaches of divide by N circuit 114, which can be set to any integer value higher than 1 to reduce the size of the secondary picture); and reproduction means for selecting either the first content information or the second content information, and reproducing the selected content information based on either the first clock or the second clock whichever corresponding to the selected content information (col. 4, lines 34-44 teaches selection of the first or second signal to be the overlaid video).

Regarding claim 2, McNeely teaches the claimed characterized in that at least either the first or second content information is content information having been recorded on a recording medium (col. 4, lines 16-22).

Regarding claim 3, McNeely teaches the claimed characterized in that at least either the first or second content information is content information having been provided from outside of the reproduction apparatus (col. 4, lines 16-22).

Regarding claims 4 and 5, McNeely teaches the claimed characterized in that the content information is configured to include a signal as a result of multiplexing a video signal to an audio signal and in that the reproduction means performs reproduction after combining a video signal of the first content information and a video signal of the second content information, and reproduces an audio signal of the selected content information based on either the first clock or the second clock whichever corresponding to the selected content information (The video signal of McNeely, whether from the source 1 or source 2, has audio information associated which are multiplexed from a broadcasting standard or from a storage standard. Therefore, when the user selects which video signal is to be the "full size large picture", the audio according to the signal chosen is reproduced).

Method claim 6 is rejected for the same reasons as discussed in apparatus claim 1 above.

Conclusion

4. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. The cited references teach standard Picture-in-Picture (PIP) technology that uses sub-sampling techniques generate different size videos to be used.
